Canadian Slavonic Papers

A BRIEF HISTORY

The Canadian Slavonic Papers was founded in the year 1956 and became the official journal of the Canadian Association of Slavists. The Canadian Slavonic Papers was first edited by Professor George Luckyj of the University of Toronto and was published as an annual hard-cover volume by the University of Toronto Press. The original objective of CSP was to provide a vehicle for the publication of the best papers presented at the annual meetings of the CAS, plus other papers the editors felt should be accepted. In the early volumes an average of eight to ten papers, primarily by Canadian Slavic scholars, were published and the volumes averaged 125 pages each. Publication of the CSP was made possible by financial support extended to the Canadian Association of Slavists by a number of Canadian universities.

The year 1956 also witnessed the founding of a sister journal, Études Slaves et Est-européennes, edited by Professor Théodore Domaradzki of the Université de Montréal. ESEE was published as a French-English quarterly for the Eastern Canada Centre of Slavists and East European Specialists. In 1968, ESEE merged with the Canadian Slavonic Papers and today is published as an annual.

Professor Luckyj earned the gratitude of the Canadian Association of Slavists for his fine work as editor and for seeing the Canadian Slavonic Papers successfully through its early and difficult years. In 1964, at the annual meeting of the CAS at Université de Laval, Professor Adam Bromke of Carleton University was elected to succeed Professor Luckyj as Managing Editor. Professor Bromke saw his task as three-fold: (1) to publish on an annual basis; (2) to expand the size and scope of the journal; and (3) to strengthen its financial position. Volumes VI-VIII reflect the success of Dr. Bromke's editorship. The size of the CSP expanded to over 250 pages per volume, with each containing an average of twelve to fifteen papers. In addition, beginning with volume VII, new features were added to the journal. Volume VII contained two special sections on: "Ten Years of the CAS," and "Multiculturalism in Canada." Volume VIII contained a special section on "Canada and Eastern Europe." These special sections were very helpful in expanding the academic value of the journal and as a result increasing the readership of each issue. In 1966, the constitution of the Canadian Association of Slavists was altered to provide for the election of two Assistant Editors to work with the Managing Editor on the production of the journal. Professors P. E. Uren and J. W. Strong of Carleton University were elected to those positions.

In 1967 when Professor Bromke stepped down as Managing Editor after three years, the CSP was firmly established and recognized as a major scholarly publication in Canada. At the Canadian Association of Slavists' meeting at Carleton University, Professor Philip E. Uren was elected as the new Managing Editor assisted by Professors G. Melnikov and J. W. Strong. Professor Uren immediately undertook a significant transformation of the journal: from an annual publication to a semi-annual in 1967 and to a quarterly format in 1968. This transformation was made financially possible by a generous donation to the CAS by Mr. Stephen Roman, President of Denison Mines Ltd., the continued and increased support of Canadian universities, and by an annual grant from the Canada Council. As negotiated and arranged by Professor Uren, the Canada Council's yearly grant has become the primary financial support of the Canadian Slavonic Papers, and has made possible its continued development as a scholarly publication.

Under Professor Uren's editorship, the practice continued of publishing a series of special sections in the journal. In Vol. IX, No. 1, there appeared a special section on "Slavic Studies in Canada." Vol. X, No. 4 became the first issue of the CSP to be devoted entirely to a single subject — "Czechoslovakia, 1968." In 1968 the overall business and editorial operation of the Canadian Slavonic Papers was expanded with the hiring of a full-time secretary, and a part-time editorial assistant. Miss Tamara A. De-Vreeze became the first person to hold the position of editorial assistant. The work of the editorial assistants has contributed greatly to the stylistic quality of the journal. In 1968, each volume was averaging 600 pages, and upwards of thirty papers were being published. Added to the journal was a small book review section, review articles and Notes and Comments.

The merger with Études Slaves et Est-européennes in 1968 was made possible by the close cooperation of its editor, Professor Domaradzki, with the editors of the CSP, and by the encouragement and support of the Canada Council.

In 1970 Professor Uren retired as Managing Editor and at the CAS meeting in Winnipeg, Professor John W. Strong was elected his successor, with Assistant Editors G. Melnikov and R. C. Elwood, both from Carleton University. The operation of the journal again underwent a reorganization. Professor Elwood was made Book Review Editor, and Professor Melnikov assumed responsibility for all French content. The rapid expansion of the book review section attests to the success of Professor Elwood's efforts. By 1973, an average of 100 books were being reviewed annually. In 1971 French abstracts to all English articles were included and a greater effort was made to develop the bilingual character of the journal.

In 1970 the decision was made, for purely financial reasons, to end the long association between the Canadian Slavonic Papers and the University of Toronto Press. It should be noted that the successful development of the journal is indebted in no small way to the excellent editorial and printing services provided by Toronto University Press. Beginning in 1970 Beauregard Press, Ltd. of Ottawa undertook the printing of the CSP.

In 1971 Miss De-Vreeze left the CSP and was replaced by Mrs. Lydia Kasianchuk; Miss Penny Morton became the administrative secretary and business manager of the journal; and Professor William Couch of Ottawa University was appointed Associate Editor in charge of advertising and promotion. Mrs. Carol Shields succeeded Mrs. Kasianchuk as Editorial Assistant in 1973. The production of the Canadian Slavonic Papers at Carleton University since 1964 has been greatly facilitated by the cooperation of the university administration in providing office space, mailing services, financial administration and other aids. This has comprised a significant contribution to the journal's continued existence.

The practice was established in 1971 of publishing one issue per year devoted to a single topic. These special issues to date have included: "Alexander Solzhenitsyn" (Vol. XIII, No. 2 & 3), "Essays on the Ukraine" (Vol. XIV, No. 2) and "Poland in the 1970's" (Vol. XV, No. 1 & 2).

Although Canadian authors predominate, the pages of the Canadian Slavonic Papers have been increasingly open to foreign contributors. Articles from the USA, Great Britain, France, Israel, Japan, India, Poland, etc. have been accepted in recent years.

The history of the Canadian Slavonic Papers from 1956 to present has been one of continued growth both in quantity and quality. The CSP is now the leading journal in Canada in the field of Slavic studies, and is increasingly known throughout the world. An active exchange programme sends the CSP to many libraries in Eastern Europe, and subscriptions exist in practically all Western nations. More significantly, the Canadian Slavonic Papers has brought increasing world attention to the breadth and scope of Slavic studies in Canada and to the activities of the Canadian Association of Slavists.

The Canadian Association of Slavists

A BRIEF HISTORY

The idea of forming an association of Canadian teachers of Slavic languages, similar to one existing in the United States, was born at a meeting of teachers of Slavic languages arranged by Professor L. Ignatieff and Professor W. Skey, 21 May 1946 at the University of Toronto. The result of this conference was the founding of the Canadian branch of AATSEEL — the American Association of Teachers of Slavic and East European Languages. The meeting was attended also by Professor N. A. M. McKenzie, President of AATSEEL, and by Professor Arthur P. Coleman of Columbia University, the initiator and founder of AATSEEL, which had come into being at the conference of teachers of Slavic languages, held 30 December 1941 in Indianapolis.¹

The tragic events of the Second World War, German occupation of Czechoslovakia, Poland, and Yugoslavia, the penetration of invading German forces into the very heart of the Soviet Republic, aroused not only the desire but also the need for a better knowledge of Slavic problems, languages and histories. There was another reason for this increase of Canadian interest in Slavic studies: As Professor W. J. Rose rightly observed, “. . . the fact that a substantial fraction of Canadians are descended from or are themselves immigrants from Slav countries.”²

In response to these demands, the universities began to include in their curricula the teaching of Slavic languages, history and literature. As Professor Coleman showed, by 1945 in the United States some 150 institutions at the collegiate level were offering courses in Slavic or other East European languages; 81 presenting instruction in Russian, and twelve providing training in Polish.³

With the termination of the Second World War, the return of army personnel, and more importantly the arrival in Canada of a large number of European intellectuals from displaced persons camps (among them teachers with degrees from Slavic departments of various European universities) offered Canadian universities a welcome addition to the numbers of needed lecturers in the field of Slavic studies.

The first conference of the newly formed AATSEEL of Canada was held 13 June 1947 at the University of Toronto. It was also attended by guests from the American AATSEEL. The membership of the Canadian branch was by then steadily increasing and several universities introduced credited courses in Russian and other Slavic languages. McMaster University in Hamilton even introduced a course in Soviet geography in 1947.⁴

Members of the Canadian and American Association of Teachers of Slavic and East European Languages maintained close contacts, attended each other's yearly conferences and exchanged speakers. In 1951 the Canadian and American AATSEEL conferences were held at the same time, 27-29 December. The Canadian conference convened at the Assumption College in Windsor and the American conference was held at Wayne University in Detroit just across the river from Windsor. On the opening day, 27 December, AATSEEL of Canada arranged a joint luncheon in Windsor with Professor Edward Micek, President of AATSEEL as guest speaker. In the evening of the same day, Professor V. J. Kaye, President of the Canadian AATSEEL was introduced by Professor Micek and addressed the American conference at Wayne University.⁵

The seventh annual conference of AATSEEL of Canada was held 31 May 1954 at the University of Manitoba in Winnipeg jointly with the Learned Societies of Canada. It was attended by 26 members. In his opening address, the President of AATSEEL of Canada brought up the question which led to discussion and the subsequent formation of the Canadian Association of Slavists. He said:

AATSEEL of Canada was originally started on very broad lines, patterned on a similar, elder organization functioning in the neighboring United States. With the growth of interest in Slavic studies in Canada and with the establishment of Slavic departments at a number of our leading universities, we were faced with specifically Canadian problems which touched wider fields, reaching beyond pure language instruction. The membership of the Association has gradually changed its composition, embracing professors and lecturers of Slavic disciplines in general. The subjects included in Slavic studies deal now with history, philology, ethnography, sociology, social and political economy, etc. Thus the membership of our association also is composed of historians, philologists, sociologists. At the same time it has narrowed predominantly to members of academic faculties. It has become an organization where problems of common interest can be discussed and ideas exchanged. I sincerely believe that the Association would benefit and grow in strength if we broaden our membership by not restricting it to actual members of academic faculties, but expanding it by the inclusion of scholars and students of Slavistics engaged in research, and those who have already established a name in the field of Slavic studies.

To be able to achieve our aims, there arises the necessity of establishing our own periodical publication where the members and invited contributors could express their opinions and publish their research findings.⁶

After a thorough discussion, the conference approved unanimously the adoption of the name "Canadian Association of Slavists", decided to apply to the Royal Society of Canada for status as a Learned Society, and appointed a committee to draft a constitution. In 1955, the Association confirmed its constitution and was recognized by the Royal Society as one of the Learned Societies of Canada.

In 1956 the first volume of the Canadian Slavonic Papers, the official organ of the CAS, made its appearance. In his Foreword, Professor George Simpson said:

This first volume sponsored by the CAS is the beginning of a publishing enterprise which seeks to promote Slavic studies and offer a practical way by which these studies may be made known in Canada and elsewhere.

⁶ Address by V. J. Kaye, President of AATSEEL of Canada, delivered at the opening of the Seventh Annual Conference of AATSEEL of Canada, 31 May 1954, University of Manitoba.

The Canadian Association of Slavists is a professional organization of those directly engaged in teaching the Slavic languages or the cognate fields of cultural and historical studies. In addition it includes associate members who have a special interest in the promotion of Slavic studies. The Association seeks to maintain a close connection between the Slavists in all large centres of Canada, and also with similar Associations outside Canada.⁷

In 1974 the Canadian Association of Slavists enters its twentieth year of very productive activity. It has made a valuable contribution to the furthering of Slavic studies in Canada and has acted as a link between scholars of Slavic studies in Canada and abroad.
